

Floor

i weep,
you slurp my tears like wine,
pervert. priest.
you lick the salt of my tear
and burp in silence.

you've grown fat on my shedding.
a god of crumps and guilt.
you moan when i cry hard enough,
sometimes i hear it. low. sticky.
I've kissed you; mouth to dust.
you tasted like home and fungus.
"weep more louder and harder"
"make a soup of it"
"i'll drink every ache of it"

i felt you crack at fourteen.
"your skin split on my ceramic smile"
i weep.
i weep on you. and you.
you open, not wide, not loud.
you peel, like scabs on knees I forgot I scraped
you show me little mouths.

they call me daughter.

they call me meal.

i lay in skins.

it bruises like a lover.

i let it.

i let everything.

i rip skin, not for the show

but because there's too much me and not enough air.

you swallow the scraps. and ask for more.

I give you my name.

you burp and say THAT WAS BITTER.

you say she was here, she was soft once.

i think you've grown teeth.

under the laminate.

i hear them clicking at night.

waiting for me to fall in whole.

and when I do,

please do not bury me.

do not mourn.

just mop around the stain

and pretend its wine.

I LAY STILL.

I SLINKS UP MY SPINE.

LIKE BLACK WATER. LIKE FORGIVENESS.

i think its inside me now.

i think i like it.